Diplomatic Source Predicts Proposals To Be Sensational

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Dec. 7 (A)-A high diplomatic source said today President Eisenhower's address to the U.N. General Assembly would contain sensational new proposals for untangling the long East-West deadlock over control of atomic energy.

The President's dramatic decision to deliver an 11th hour appeal for peace in the atomic era-as the Assembly prepared to wind up its eighth session-created a sense of urgent expectancy among Russians, Westerners, Asians and Arabs alike.

Speaks At 4 P. M.

While all sides speculated on what would be contained in the American leader's speech at 4 p .m, EST., tomorrow, the diplomatic source said it would be the most important pronouncement on the atomic problem to be made to the U.N. in years.

In some ways, Eisenhower's acceptance of an invitation from U.N. Secretary General Dag Hammarskjold to speak to the Assembly was considered unprecedented. Chiefs of state have spoken to the 60-nation world organization before, but usually at the cooper fore, but usually at the opening of a session or under arrangements made far in advance.

Mystic Mistletoe

It makes no difference to the lad and lass under the mistletoe whether their kiss is sanctioned by Phoradendron flavescens, the American mistletoe, or Viscum album, the European variety. First settlers in America found a parasitic plant with the evergreen leaves, golden bark and pearl-like berries that was similar to the mistletoe they knew in the Old World.

So they transformed to the new plant the folklore associated with the old. The American shrub is not the one that was sacred to the Druids' rites, but no one appears to be bothered by the difference.

Mistletoe is more heavily encrusted with folklore than any other plant. Sir James Frazer started to investigate the legends around it, and did not end until he had published 12 massive volumes about ancient cults under the title "The Golden Bough." As for kissing under the mistletoe, one source of the custom is found in Scandinavian mythology.

The wicked spirit, Loki, hated Balder, favorite of the gods. He made an arrow of mistletoe and gave it to the god of darkness to test. The latter shot the arrow and killed Balder. He was later restored to life, and the mistletoe given to the goddess of love to keep, every one passing under it receiving a kiss as proof that it was an emblem of love, not of death.

American mistletoe is parasitic on maple, tupelo, poplar. It occurs in the southern half of the United States, with larger forms on the Pacific Coast. Mistletoe berries when ripe are filled with a sticky, translucent pulp that is a source of bird lime. Yet the fruit is eaten by birds, such as cardinals and mocking birds, and they sow its seed. The birds wipe their beaks, to which the seeds adhere, against bark of trees on which they alight. The gum hardens, protecting the seed: when the seed germinates the sucker root penetrates the bark and makes a connection with the circulatory system of the victim plant.

It is easy to understand how the mistletoe could become the mystic golden bough. It is a plant of the air, never touching earth, propagated through the agency of birds, and always living parasitically on an alien root. In the laughter that accompanies its hanging is heard the voices of forgotten centuries.

Working With Party Leaders

President Eisenhower is due to confer on December 10, 11, and 12 with the Republican leaders in Congress on the administration's program for 1954. Not only is the conference quite in character for the President, with his faith in teamwork and his disinclination to ride roughshod, but also it is in line with Republican

Five of the six Republican presidents of this century worked, or tried to work, with their congressional leaders. The exception was Theodore Roosevelt, dictatorial by nature and convinced that any chief executive who didn't lay down the law would inevitably end by having the law laid down to him.

McKinley and Taft tried so valiantly for agreement with Congress that they were accused of being subservient to the legislative branch. Harding deferred more widely to the party leaders than was good for him. Coolidge didn't have many positive proposals to lay before Congress, but relied on it to kill proposals he opposed. Hoover cooperated with Congress to the extent that the depression let him cooperate with it and it with him.

On the other hand, all three Democratic presidents of the 20th Century were on the arbitrary side. Woodrow Wilson did start by working hand in glove with the Democrats in Congress, on a give-and-take basis, but after war broke out in Europe played more of a lone hand, especially on foreign policy. Such advice as the second Roosevelt took he took mostly from outside of Congress - even his Supreme Court plan of 1937 was sprung on his congressional leaders

And Harry S. Truman, although he may have consulted from time to time, was no man to defer to advice that rubbed him the wrong way. All in all, the paths followed by these nine presidents were probably determined more by their emotional predilections than by their intellectual philosophies

The Christmas Tree

The Christmas tree industry is a gigantic multimillion dollar business, perhaps exceeding $50,000,000 at the retail level. Each year an additional 2,000.000 Christmas trees are required for the nation's needs. This season an estimated total of 35,000,000 trees are

By careful selection of trees to be cut, it is possible to obtain Christmas trees without harming the forest, according to O. W. Spicer, president of the Bartlett Tree Experts. In many areas there are Christmas tree farms, for trees are a profitable crop. Harvesting of trees begins about 10 weeks before Christmas. The trees are selected, cut, moved to concentration yards, sorted, sometimes tagged, trimmed, bundled and hauled to a shipping center. Labor and transportation represent much of the cost. Not all Christmas trees in the U.S. are home grown; more than 5,000,000 are imported every year from Canada. The average indoor tree is five to seven feet high. In the East, tall Norway spruces are used as outdoor community trees. One of the biggest ever erected was a white fir in Los Angeles several years ago that was more than 96 feet tall. Slow growth produces the best quality trees-more symmetrical and more dense of foliage. The poorer the soil, the more slowly the tree grows.

Small living Christmas trees on lawns are increasing in popularity in the suburbs. The evergreens are part of the landscape plantings.

Some small living firs, yew, and spruces are sold at Christmas time. They come in tubs or other containers and can be used in the home during the Christmas season. The live tree can be planted. If properly cared for and watered, it will live. A Christmas tree, big or little, indoors or out, is a symbol everywhere of the living Christmas spirit.

The Hemorrhoid Nuisance

Hemorrhoids are a group of blood vessels that line the walls of the rectum. There are two sets: the internal lie under the membranes of the rectum and the external are beneath the skin that encircles the outlet. These vessels have no valves and in this respect differ from veins elsewhere in the body. Without this safeguard they become overdistended when the individual stands or strains. Their location makes them more susceptible to inflammation, obstruction, and bleeding. Heredity plays a role; some men and women are born with weak tissues that are likely to give way when the strain is too great. These persons may develop enlarged hemorrhoids early in life.

Symptoms rarely occur unless one of the external veins increases in size and projects to the outside. In this stage there is vague soreness which goes away as soon as swelling subsides. The condition is aggravated by constipation, straining at stool, or being jostled or lifting heavy objects. Anything that increases pressure in the abdomen such as pregnancy or tumors also makes matters worse.

Some victims are never bothered beyond this. Recurrences take place following periods of fatigue or overindulgence in food and drink. Bleeding may alleviate the condition because swelling and irritation subside when the vein is empty. As a rule external piles respond to rest and cleanliness.

Internal hemorrhoids are less likely to be troublesome unless they become inflamed or rupture. The swelling produced by these complications is painful and occasionally leads to total incapacity. Distress is accentuated by a variety of reflex disturbances such as indigestion, backache, nervousness, and irritability. Itching also occurs and now and then there is an irritating mucous discharge. Surgery is needed when the agony is unbearable but many surgeons prefer to wait until inflammation and puffiness disappear.

Discomfort is relieved by rest because the increased pressure brought about from standing or sitting distends the walls of the vein. Cleanliness minimizes infection but it is important to remove increase irritation. Lubricants, suppositories, and hot sitz baths are recommended for the severe types but the effect is temporary: Permanent cure is obtained through surgery and to a lesser extent with injection treatments. When only one hemorrhoid is removed there is no guarantee that the other veins will not plague the individual at a later date. Such operations are less painful because only the affected vein is extirpated but the surgeon stands a chance of being criticized should the other hemorrhoidal veins become infected or bleed. The victim is sure that the first procedure was not successful because the results were not per-

The Eisenhower administration wanted to demonstrate that it could handle the Communist issue without any help from Mc-Carthy. . . Brownell's speech was Press Secretary Jim Hagerty the morning before its delivery, but infortunately, Hagerty didn't sense the implications of the sentence reflecting on Truman's loyalty. As a result, the speech backfired, and Brownell was forced to call on G-Man J. Edgar Hoover to bail him out. . . Actually, the White House didn't want to rile Truman nor involve the FBI in politics. The whole idea had been concocted as a master strategy to neutralize the senator from Wisconsin. . . After Senator McCarthy's radio blast accusing the Eisenhower administration of "perfumed notes" diplomacy, Secretary of State Dulles was so furious that he interrupted President Eisenhower's Thanksgiving vacation with a phone call to Augusta. . . . ## Contracts And Pickets

It must be asked whether a labor contract is a contract at all. If a union and an employer come to terms, prepare a contract which represents a meeting of the minds, and that contract provides a period, say one, two or three years, may that contract be violated because another union establishes a picket line around the premises? This, it would seem, is a fundamental in labor relations. John L. Lewis, for instance, has always taken the position that the miners will not work unless a contract exists between the United Mine Workers and the employers. Most unions now adopt the same

But the unions maintain that a picket line is inviolable. Thus, in an enterprise involving, let us say, 10 unions, if one union strikes and establishes a picket line, the other nine unions refuse to work but without formally cailing a strike. If the one union's contract was terminated, but the other nine have contracts still to run, this device may be used by the other nine unions to strike without violating their contracts. They could even say that they want to go to work. that they do not approve of the strike, but that they cannot cross a picket line by the traditions of trade unionism. Thus they actually join the

Of what value then is any contract with any labor union?

If a self-imposed picket line can be used as a justification for the violation of a contract, a contract is violable at the moment of signing and therefore is nullified from the moment of signature. The labor contract is then meaningless, useless, and can have no place in collective bargaining.

In the instance of the newspaper strike in New York, a small union of highly paid workers was called out on strike over wage and fringe benefits. The real motive of the strike was an internal struggle for power within the union. No other union went on strike because that would have been a violation of their contracts. Nevertheless, all the workers refused to enter the premises of their employment because they would not cross a picket Therefore, all the daily newspapers were closed down ostensibly because the photoengravers, without whom any newspaper can exist, struck Thousands were put out of work.

If all the unions agreed in advance upon such a procedure, it could be a conspiracy to violate existing contracts and to damage property. It would be an illegal strike. Such pre-arrangement may or may not be demonstrable; the likelihood is that no one will attempt to get at that fact, because business is chary of additional headaches and public officials escape unpleasant tasks. Actually, under the Taft-Hartley Act, the cooperating unions could be sued for damages, but their defense would undoubtedly be that they never struck at all, but were prohibited from fulfilling their contractual obligations by the picket line.

What makes the picket line sacrosanct? Actually, on the waterfront in New York the picket line has been ignored by contending unions on the grounds that the strikers belonged to an outlawed union which included men with criminal records. If a labor union can ignore a picket line for any reason, why should workers honor a picket line which is a violation of their contract?

This escape from responsibility destroys collective bargaining, the object of which is to reach orderly contractual relationships between employer and employe. Under our system of life, the contract ought to be inviolate during its term, as any other contract is.

A contract is a legal instrument expressing the actual or presumed intentions of the parties to it, and applying only to those concerned and not to the public generally. If one party to a contract meets the stipulated terms, the other party to it has neither a legal nor a moral ground for breaking it except in clear instances which might be termed "Acta of God," that is, natural disasters, wars, etc. Not even remotely may a picket line he regarded as an "Act of God." although it may produce a national disaster.

Surely, those who wish to revise the Taft-Hartley Law need to revise the relationship of the picket line to the labor contract. If it is lawful to violate a contract because of a picket line, of what avail is a contract?

sible for the start of the row, the fact is that the administration bungled it badly from the very beginning. When anything so important as a fight inside the Republican party is about to be precipitated, it would seem that the matter would be of such importance as to command consideration by the President along with members of his cabinet. Nobody in the cabinet outside the secretary of state was consulted before the statement was issued by Mr. Dulles, who was anxious to please the British by showing that the administration was not as critical of the British trade with the Communists during the Korean War as is Senator McCarthy. Yet the subject had in it most far-reaching implications on the domestic side

It will not do any good to count telegrams for or against Senator McCarthy, or letters either. No matter what the proportion, even if it is only a minority of 25 per cent, that's enough when carried through the electorate to lose both houses of Congress to the Democrats by the simple maneuver of Republicans staying away from the polls. This happened recently in both the Wisconsin and New Jersey special elections for Congress. For even though the issues were different in these two contests the fact that a majority of the Republicans who voted for congressmen in 1952 stayed away in 1953 was enough to give the Democrats their victory.

The issue which Senator McCarthy has made is so clear-cut that it is incredible that someone in the administration should not have been able to to advise the President and Secretary Dulles how to

it. . . . Wilson also indicated that the United States planned to pull some of its troops out of Europe; the President told a press conference that the U.S. has no such plan. . . . These are a few of the discordant notes that have Jackson holding his ears and crying for more "harmonizing."

But when Senator McCarthy came on immediately afterward there was a loud roar of approval even before he started to speak and, according to a friend who was present and reported it to this writer. the applause was deafening when the Senator finished speaking. This merely confirms that emotional issues are highly dangerous in politics. One of the oldest rules in politics is "never create an unnecessary controversy inside your own party

Democrats Won't Help

With a majority of only one in the Senate why should a Republican president, it is asked, antagonize any minority in his party? The Truman-Stevenson press in Washington has been needling Mr. Eisenhower to split his party on the McCarthy issue. The President presumably believes the problem invol es on his part merely a like or dislike for one senator, He seems to have fallen for the specious argument that he must assert "leadership" over both parties and get a catch-all majority. It's a fallacious theory because the opposition party will not give solid support to a Republican president's program just before an election.

What has happened is that the President has gained the applause of Stevenson-Truman Democrats throughout the country who wouldn't vote Republican anyhow next time and he has lost enough of the Republican vote to assure a Democratic victory in both 1954 and 1956 unless by some miracle he can learn the fundamentals of party leadership between now and the next elections. coming Congress the Democrats will vote solidly against him anyhow on most issues and if a handful of disaffected Republicans don't vote at all the Eisenhower legislative program is as good as

The late William Howard Taft made a blunder on the tariff in midterm that cost his party both houses of Congress in 1910 and it begins to look as if history is repeating itself on an issue of even graver importance-American indifference to trade between the Allies and the Communists at a time when 140,000 American casualties were being incurred in Korea. Truman permitted it, but Eisenhower is apologizing for defending the policy.

Mystic Mistletoe

It makes no difference to the lad and lass under the mistletoe whether their kiss is sanctioned by Phoradendron flavescens, the American mistletoe, or Viscum album, the European variety. First settlers in America found a parasitic plant with the evergreen differ from veins elsewhere in the leaves, golden bark and pearl-like berries that was similar to the mistletoe they knew in the Old World.

So they transformed to the new plant the folklore associated with the old. The American shrub is not the one that was sacred to the Druids' rites, but no one appears to be bothered by the difference.

Mistletoe is more heavily encrusted with folklore than any other plant. Sir James Frazer started to investigate the legends around it, and did not end until he had published 12 massive volumes about ancient cults under the title "The Golden Bough." As for kissing under the mistletoe, one source of the custom is found in Scandinavian mythology.

The wicked spirit, Loki, hated Balder, favorite of the gods. He made an arrow of mistletoe and gave it to the god of darkness to test. The latter shot the arrow and killed Balder. He was later restored to life, and the mistletoe given to the goddess of love to keep, every one passing under it receiving a kiss as proof that it was an emblem of love, not of death.

American mistletoe is parasitic on maple, tupelo, poplar. It occurs in the southern half of the United States, with larger forms on the Pacific Coast. Mistletoe berries when ripe are filled with a sticky, translucent pulp that is a source of bird lime. Yet the fruit is eaten by birds, such as cardinals and mocking birds, and they sow its seed. The birds wipe their beaks, to which the seeds adhere, against bark of trees on which they alight. The gum hardens, protecting the seed; when the seed germinates the sucker root penetrates the bark and makes a connection with the circulatory system of the victim plant.

It is easy to understand how the mistletoe could become the mystic golden bough. It is a plant of the air, never touching earth, propagated through the agency of birds, and always living parasitically on an alien root. In the laughter that accompanies its hanging is heard the voices of forgotten centuries.

Working With Party Leaders

President Eisenhower is due to confer on December 10, 11, and 12 with the Republican leaders in Congress on the administration's program for 1954. Not only is the conference quite in character for the President, with his faith in teamwork and his disinclination to ride roughshod, but also it is in line with Republican

Five of the six Republican presidents of this century worked, or tried to work, with their congressional leaders. The exception was Theodore Roosevelt, dictatorial by nature and convinced that any chief executive who didn't lay down the law would inevitably end by having the law laid down to him.

McKinley and Taft tried so valiantly for agreement with Congress that they were accused of being subservient to the legislative branch. Harding deferred more widely to the party leaders than was good for him. Coolidge didn't have many positive proposals to lay before Congress, but relied on it to kill proposals he opposed. Hoover cooperated with Congress to the extent that the depression let him cooperate with it

On the other hand, all three Democratic presidents of the 20th Century were on the arbitrary side. Woodrow Wilson did start by working hand in glove with the Democrats in Congress, on a give-and-take basis, but after war broke out in Europe played more of a lone hand, especially on foreign policy. Such advice as the second Roosevelt took he took mostly from outside of Congress - even his Supreme Court plan of 1937 was sprung on his congressional leaders

And Harry S. Truman, although he may have consulted from time to time, was no man to defer to advice that rubbed him the wrong way. All in all, the paths followed by these nine presidents were probably determined more by their emotional predilections than by their intellectual philosophies

The Christmas Tree

The Christmas tree industry is a gigantic multimillion dollar business, perhaps exceeding $50,000,000 at the retail level. Each year an additional 2,000,000 Christmas trees are required for the nation's needs. This season an estimated total of 35,000,000 trees are being sold.

By careful selection of trees to be cut, it is possible to obtain Christmas trees without harming the forest, according to O. W. Spicer, president of the Bartlett Tree Experts. In many areas there are Christmas tree farms, for trees are a profitable crop.

Harvesting of trees begins about 10 weeks before Christmas. The trees are selected, cut, moved to concentration yards, sorted, sometimes tagged, trimmed, bundled and hauled to a shipping center. Labor and transportation represent much of the cost. Not all Christmas trees in the U.S. are home grown; more than 5,000,000 are imported every year from Canada.

The average indoor tree is five to seven feet high. In the East, tall Norway spruces are used as outdoor community trees. One of the biggest ever erected was a white fir in Los Angeles several years ago that was more than 96 feet tall.

Slow growth produces the best quality trees-more symmetrical and more dense of foliage. The poorer the soil, the more slowly the tree grows.

Small living Christmas trees on lawns are increasing in popularity in the suburbs. The evergreens are

at Christmas time. They come in tubs or other containers and can be used in the home during the Christmas season. The live tree can be planted. If properly cared for and watered, it will live.

A Christmas tree, big or little, indoors or out, is a symbol everywhere of the living Christmas spirit.

The Hemorrhoid

Nuisance

Hemorrhoids are a group of blood vessels that line the walls of the rectum. There are two sets: the internal lie under the membranes of the rectum and the external are beneath the skin that encircles the outlet. These vessels have no valves and in this respect body. Without this safeguard they become overdistended when the individual stands or strains. Their location makes them more susceptible to inflammation, obstruction and bleeding. Heredity plays a role; some men and women are born with weak tissues that are likely to give way when the strain is too great. These persons may develop enlarged hemorrhoids

Symptoms rarely occur unless one of the external veins increases in size and projects to the outside. In this stage there is vague soreness which goes away as soon as swelling subsides. The condition is aggravated by constipation, straining at stool, or being jostled or lifting heavy objects. Anything that increases pressure in the abdomen such as pregnancy or tumors also makes matters worse.

Some victims are never bothered beyond this. Recurrences take place following periods of fatigue or overindulgence in food and drink. Bleeding may alleviate the condition because swelling and irritation subside when the vein is empty. As a rule external piles respond to rest and cleanliness.

Internal hemorrhoids are less likely to be troublesome unless they become inflamed or rupture. The swelling produced by these complications is painful and occasionally leads to total incapacity, Distress is accentuated by a variety of reflex disturbances such as indigestion, backache, nervousness, and irritability. Itching also occurs and now and then there is an irritating mucous discharge.
